- Mg. Editor

Dear Readers,
Greetings from PMA

It gives me immense pleasure in inviting to another edition of Organizational Management (OM) of Palghat Management Association. Here we are discussing the current state of affairs of Semiconductor industry in India. It has potential and going to be a game changer in the Indian technology sector.

Semiconductor industry in India

It is expected that India is set to embark on an ambitious journey of becoming a leader in the semiconductor industry, with a projected domestic semiconductor consumption expected to cross $ 80 billion by 2026. At the heart of India's push for semiconductor self-reliance lies a vision to reduce dependence on imports and establish domestic manufacturing capabilities. Policymakers and politicians, including Prime Minister, have emphasized the sector's importance to India's future and aim to establish the country as a key partner in the global semiconductor supply chains. This vision is propelled by several advantages that India possesses, making it a promising destination for semiconductor innovation and production.

The semiconductor industry is highly competitive, with major players from countries like the United States, China, South Korea, and Taiwan dominating the market. However, in recent times, India has emerged as a rising star in the industry, endowed with a comparative edge that could potentially reshape the landscape of the global semiconductor sphere.

One of India's key advantages is its vast and burgeoning market potential. With a rapidly growing population and a burgeoning middle class, India offers a huge consumer base for semiconductor products, providing a strong demand driver for the industry. More specifically, India's talent pool can propel semiconductor developments and encourage domestic chip design skills by giving a significant emphasis on skill development and innovation. The government's push to boost domestic manufacturing through policies like the Production Linked Incentive (PLI) scheme for electronics manufacturing further enhances the attractiveness of the Indian market for semiconductor companies.

The Indian semiconductor market is poised to witness stellar growth backed by projections reaching $ 55 billion by 2026. This reflects India's increasing focus on domestic semiconductor manufacturing and its ambition to establish a strong presence in the global semiconductor supply chains. With investments in semiconductor fabrication plants and production facilities, India aims to reduce its reliance on imports and boost its self-dependence in the semiconductor industry. ABSTRACT

In the realm of healthcare technology, the development of an ESP Now-based IV Bag Monitoring System represents a pioneering effort to enhance patient care and streamline medical processes. This innovative system integrates cutting-edge components, including an ESP32 transmitter, a weight sensor, an LCD display, and push buttons, to create a comprehensive solution for real-time IV bag monitoring with reduced Wi-Fi dependence. The primary objective of this project is to design a robust and adaptable system that ensures accurate and continuous monitoring of IV bag parameters. The ESP32 transmitter serves as the central hub, orchestrating seamless communication between various components. The weight sensor, a critical element in the system, is tasked with providing precise measurements of the IV bag's weight, translating this data into meaningful information for healthcare providers.

The integration of push buttons introduces a user-friendly interface, allowing healthcare professionals to input and adjust the IV bag capacity with ease. This interactive feature empowers providers to customize the system according to specific patient needs, fostering a personalized approach to intravenous fluid administration.

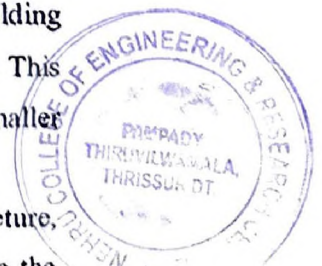

The ESP Now protocol, known for its efficiency in low-power and reliable wireless communication, plays a pivotal role in the system's architecture. By minimizing reliance on traditional Wi-Fi infrastructure, the ESP Now-based solution becomes particularly relevant in areas with limited connectivity or resource constraints. This feature ensures the system's versatility, making it applicable in diverse healthcare settings, ranging from large hospitals to remote clinics.

The LCD display serves as a visual feedback mechanism, providing real-time information on IV bag weight, user inputs, and system status. This not only enhances the transparency of the monitoring process but also facilitates quick decision-making by healthcare providers.

In the socioeconomic context, the importance of this ESP Now-enabled IV Bag Monitoring System becomes apparent. The reduced Wi-Fi dependence addresses challenges faced by healthcare facilities in resource-constrained settings, where building and maintaining extensive network infrastructure may be financially burdensome. This affordability extends the accessibility of advanced monitoring solutions to smaller healthcare facilities, contributing to more equitable healthcare delivery.

Furthermore, the system's resilience in areas with poor Wi-Fi infrastructure, such as rural healthcare settings, ensures that patients in underserved areas receive the same level of meticulous monitoring as their urban counterparts. This adaptability aligns with broader efforts to bridge healthcare disparities and promote inclusivity.

In emergency scenarios or disaster-stricken regions, where conventional communication networks may be compromised, the ESP Now-based system stands as a beacon of reliability. The continuous monitoring it offers during crises is paramount for timely and informed decision-making, potentially saving lives in critical situations.

In conclusion, the ESP Now-based IV Bag Monitoring System embodies innovation and adaptability in healthcare technology. By leveraging advanced wireless communication, precise sensing technology, and user-friendly interfaces, it not only revolutionizes the monitoring of intravenous fluid administration but also addresses socioeconomic challenges, contributing to more inclusive and resilient healthcare systems

CHAPTER – 5

PROPOSED TECHNOLOGY : ESP-NOW PROTOCOL

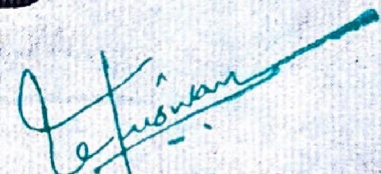

Due to wifi dependence we had replaced the new system with ESP-Now protocol. ESP-NOW is a connectionless communication protocol developed by Espressif that features short packet transmission. This protocol enables multiple devices to talk to each other in an easy way.

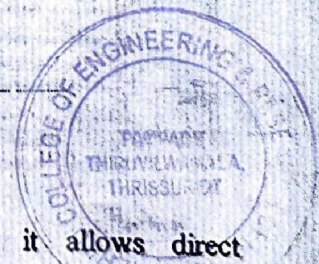

Stating the Espressif website, ESP-NOW is a “protocol developed by Espressif, which enables multiple devices to communicate with one another without using Wi-Fi. The protocol is similar to the low-power 2.4GHz wireless connectivity (...). The pairing between devices is needed prior to their communication. After the pairing is done, the connection is safe and peer-to-peer, with no handshake being required.”

5.1 How it works

Communication protocol

ESP-NOW operates as a peer-to-peer (P2P) protocol, meaning it allows direct communication between two ESP8266 or ESP32 devices without the need for a central server or access point, e.g. a Wi-Fi® router. Each ESP device has a unique MAC address which is used to identify the receiving board.

ESP-NOW can be set up in different ways:

One-way communication: In one-way communication mode, one device (the sender) can send data to another device (the receiver) without expecting a response. This mode is often used for scenarios where one device provides data or commands to another device, such as remote sensor readings or control commands.

Two-way communication: In two-way communication mode, both devices can exchange data bidirectionally. This mode enables a back-and-forth exchange of information between the devices, allowing for more interactive and responsive communication. It's suitable for applications where devices need to send and receive data from each other, such as remote control systems or interactive IoT devices.

5.2 ESP-NOW Communication

Protocol Stack

ESP-NOW operates primarily at the data-link layer of the OSI model. In contrast to traditional networking protocols that involve multiple layers, ESP-NOW condenses the communication stack, streamlining the process. By reducing the protocol stack to a single layer, ESP-NOW eliminates the need for complex packet headers and unpackers on each layer. This simplicity results in quicker response times, reducing delays caused by packet loss in congested networks.
